Comply 365, a software design and development company, is relocating its headquarters to the Ironworks Campus in downtown Beloit.

The company, which is leasing more than 4,000-square-feet of office space, expects to increase both its footprint and employee count within the next three years.

“This move is providing the additional space required to accommodate the company’s rapidly expanding mobile applications, engineered cloud-based enterprise platforms and support center solutions. The economics of the Ironworks, coupled with its appealing high-tech environment for employees and clients alike, matched our location requirements. Wisconsin’s favorable business climate and its coordinated economic development approach were important factors, as well,” said Kerry Frank, co-founder and CEO of Comply365.

Kerry and Dude Frank began their aviation software business, then called Balanced IT Solutions, in 2007 in the basement of their home. By 2011 the Franks celebrated a deal with a major airline which allowed it to increase its staff by 50 percent.

Comply 365 is the software the company developed to transform what Frank said are outdated, paper-trail document-keeping systems used by many airlines today. Dude Frank provides the on-site technical expertise for the business. The company has been based in Roscoe, Ill.

The Ironworks is a 750,000-square-foot mixed use property and home to more than a dozen companies that represent a range of industry sectors. The Ironworks campus formerly was home to Beloit Corporation.

The property is owned, managed and developed by Hendricks Commercial Properties LLC.

The Wisconsin Economic Development Corporation facilitated this project through a tax credit award.
