Comply365, a small, growing software company, is moving to downtown Beloit from Roscoe, Ill., a few miles across the state line.

The 17-employee firm will occupy 4,000 square feet in the Ironworks Building, part of the former Beloit Corp. complex renovated by Diane Hendricks and her late husband, Ken.

Comply365 CEO Kerry Frank, who founded the company five years ago with her husband, Dude, said the firm is moving to Beloit because it has been growing and needs flexible space in which it can expand.

Comply365's niche has been cloud-based compliance software for mobile devices in aviation, Frank said. She said the firm has been expanding into software for such industries as food and medicine.
